Virginia R. Boynton is an Associate Professor of History at Western Illinois University. She completed her Ph.D. at Ohio State University in 1995, and her articles on twentieth-century Midwestern women have been published in Ohio History, Mid-America, and Chicago History. Her current research focuses on the Illinois Woman's Committee during World War I.

Lola I. DeVore received a bachelor's degree in History from Illinois State University in May, 2000. She is a secretary for United Campus Christian Foundation, a campus ministry serving Illinois State University. Reading and historical research in the Revolutionary and Civil War eras, old cemeteries, and genealogy are among her interests.

Barbara J. Mitchell, a native of Illinois who now lives in north-eastern Pennsylvania, is an independent scholar and graduate of Douglass College of Rutgers University. She is completing a book about Monticello College. As a freelance writer/editor, she has been published in regional and national magazines. She is most interested in nineteenth century American women's history but has written about other topics as well, such as the 1920s resurgence of the KKK in central Illinois. She is also a journalist who has written for several newspapers and the Associated Press, and is a contributing editor for an online magazine. Those interested in her book-length account of Monticello College may write her at RR 2, Box 2340, Hallstead, PA 18822.

Jim Nazzari, originally from Wisconsin, is a doctoral candidate in History at Washington State University, with fields in Middle East, American, and Women's History. He has published articles on the Palestinian-Israeli conflict and the history of the American West. His research interests include American twentieth century diplomatic History, Middle Eastern Women's History, and Nineteenth-Century American Women's History. Currently, he is teaching American History at the North Carolina School of Science and Mathematics in Durham, North Carolina.

Kay J. Carr is an Associate Professor of History at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale. After receiving her Ph.D. from the University of Chicago in 1987, she has taught classes on American and World History. Her publications include a new introduction to Christiana Holmes Tillson's A Woman's Story of Pioneer Illinois (published in 1995) and Belleville, Ottawa, and Galesburg: Community and Democracy on the Illinois Frontier (1996). Her current research focuses on women in Illinois History.

Covers

Our front cover offers a drawing of the original main building of the Monticello Female Seminary (as it was then called). The photograph on the back cover shows its replacement, with students, around 1900. Both are reproduced by kind permission of the Illinois State Historical Library.
